

Advance Publicity for “The West Coast of Ireland”

Ireland is the Emerald Isle and no place in Ireland is more beautiful and unspoiled than the West Coast. We’ll briefly look at the history and geography of this famous land before talking an adventurous drive to see ancient castles, modern towns and the highest cliffs in Europe as well as miles and miles of spectacular scenery.

Richard Jordan is a former President of the Etobicoke Historical Society and a former Toronto Star local history columnist. His feature articles on historical subjects have also appeared in the Saturday Star and the Sunday Star. He says, “I like to look at a place and imagine how it changed through time – who once lived there and how the residents live now.”

The photo below shows the mighty Cliffs of Moher on Ireland’s west coast. At their tallest, they are 702 feet high and run for 14 km along the wild Atlantic Ocean. But the cliffs are only one of Ireland’s attractions. There are castles, beaches, cathedrals and unending green fields. Come and take a pleasant break by spending an hour with me in beautiful Ireland.
